STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Description of Properties or Associative Value

The initial services of the Lemonville Methodist Church began in 1854 within a frame school house, and in 1856, the original church building was constructed near the present site. The first ministers included John Lacey and R. Cade, who would typically reach Lemonville by horse and cutter or an iron-tired buggy traveling through the winding bush trails and over the many plank bridges.

In 1869, the existing church structure was constructed at the present location. Located beside the church is a cemetery, where grave inscriptions include a date of death as early as 1857. This implies that the grave yard located adjacent to the present church was in existence during the era of the original church structure built in 1856.

Many years later in 1954, mounting repair costs and the inability to pay the Minister's salary caused the Lemonville Church to close. However, the dedicated members of the Women's Association continued their monthly meetings and several student ministers continued to visit during the summer months. Despite the grave condition of the church, Marion Rae took up the challenge of re-opening the church. She urged locals to contribute to the necessary renovations, and in 1957, she organized the first formal service since the church's closure. In 1964 the necessary renovations to the structure took place, and since then, the congregation members have continued to work wholeheartedly on behalf of the church to sustain its operations.

Design or Physical Value

The present Lemonville Church structure is a typical frame construction built by local pioneers in Lemonville. The existing structure was constructed using solid timber for the superstructure and unwanted granite boulders from local farm fields to form the basement walls.

Contextual Value

In the early beginnings of the church Sunday services served as the only regular opportunity for locals to socialize and discuss matters of interest. As the operations of the church evolved, numerous community groups were established by members of the church allowing for the inclusion of people of all ages and all backgrounds. The church now continues to serve as the core social, communal and religious centre for the local residents of Lemonville. Lemonville United Church is now considered to be the oldest house of worship within Whitchurch-Stouffville still in regular use due to the longstanding devotion and determination of the congregation members to sustain the operations of the church.
